

Postmodernism and Theology

Namsoon Kang
Professor of Theology and Religion

COURSE DESCRIPTION AND OBJECTIVES

Postmodernism has been exerting considerable influence upon contemporary theology. Modernism and postmodernism represent one of the most important discourses for developing a theological discourse and practice today. Some of the central assumptions of modernism are related to notions such as rationality, truth, subjectivity, and progress, whereas a central feature of postmodernism has been its critique of totality, reason, and universality. By asserting the primacy of the historical and contingent in the construction of reason, authority, truth, ethics, and identity, postmodernism provides a politics of representation and a basis for social struggle.

The questions that this course will address are:

- How one could tell the Christian story in a postmodern, pluralistic world;
- How one could theologically/philosophically address the postmodern world;
- How one could do postmodern theology.

This course is therefore for you to explore the philosophical/intellectual background of postmodernism, to articulate a critical perspective on postmodernism, and to examine the ways in which theologians and practitioners address issues of postmodernism and the theological issues in their thinking and practice.
